KundenrezensionenHilfreichste Kundenrezensionen0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. Fine Jewish Folktale ResourceVon Marcia W. PosnerThis fine resource is divided into three sections by grade levels:

kindergarten, first to third grades, and fourth to sixth grades. Thirty pages of prefatory material discuss folk literature and its age appropriateness at different stages of development. The source of each tale is provided in the margin along with other tidbits of information. The 38 stories are drawn from ancient Talmudic and Midrash tales and have been altered as little as possible. Among the titles and values shared are "Alef is Chosen" (humility), "The Rosebush and the Apple Tree" (generosity), "The Bear's Bellyache" (cleverness), "The First Tear" (compassion), and "The Old Crone and the Little Girl" (obedience). Watercolor illustrations appear on the first few pages; the rest of the images are rendered in ink. Fanciful borders adorn each section. - Marcia W. Posner, Holocaust Memorial and Educational Center of Nassau County, Glen Cove, NY

Kurzbeschreibung A unique graded collection of thirty-eight stories drawn from ancient Jewish Talmudic and Midrash sources, retold for children ages four to twelve. The stories range from the familiar to the obscure, and have been selected and arranged from the standpoint of child development along Waldorf education guidelines. Beautiful illustrations and sidebar "tidbits" containing interesting historical and cultural detail enhance each tale. Setting the collection of stories in a cultural context, the book opens with an introductory chapter on the history of Jewish folklore. The second chapter describes the type of literature appropriate for each grade level from an educational and developmental point of view. The book is enhanced with a glossary, an index, and selected bibliography. The collection of stories is divided into three separate color sections: Kindergarten: for ages four to six, First to Third Grades: for ages six to eight, and Fourth to Six Grades: for ages nine to twelve.
