This is a hilarious look at some of the public figures we have today. Love Keith, no matter where he goes. Just wish he'd left the last gig quietly and without a fuss.

In fact, he has gone out of his way to become a thorn in the side of pundits, politicians, and apologists, exposing their venality, manipulation, and flat-out lies for what they are. From the national disaster that was the Bush administration to agents of the Fox News propaganda machine to the tin foil-hat crowd that calls itself the Tea Party--all have felt the sting of Olbermann's bitter indictments, biting satire, and blistering mockery. In Pitchforks and Torches, Olbermann presents a powerful selection of his most potent barrages from the days immediately following the 2008 election through the first year of the Obama administration. He is alternately passionate, furious, and humorously nonplussed as he responds to the right wing's increasingly disloyal and nutty opposition to virtually all of the president's programs and the emergence of congressional Republicans as the "Party of No."Whether sticking it to such usual suspects as Bill O'Reilly, Boss Limbaugh, and Glenn "Lonesome Rhodes" Beck as "The Worst Person in the World"; tracking W's calamitous legacy in the "Worst of Bush"; or getting down to the nitty-gritty of major issues in his influential "Special Comments" and "Quick Comments," Olbermann articulates and energizes progressive positions on the great issues of our time as no one else can. Discover what Keith Olbermann has to say about: President Bush's use and defense of the torture of terrorism suspectsThe birther movementSarah Palin's death-panel fantasiesRepublican attempts to rename the Democratic PartyMichael Steele's bizarre stewardship of the Republican PartyThe Blue Dog Democrats who scuttled real health care reformAnd much moreComplete with cogent critiques of President Obama's health care strategy as well as his decision to send additional troops to Afghanistan, Pitchforks and Torches is welcome reading for Countdown lovers, Olbermann fans, and anyone who enjoys a good dose of reality with their politics.
