Reminiscences of a Ranger - Early Times in Southern CalifornVon peter yorkExcellent book for anyone interested in a first person account of life in frontier Los Angeles. Although perhaps prone to exaggerate a little, Bell paints a vivid picture of outlaws, gunmen, bull fights and grizzly bears during the wild and lawless times of 1850's Southern California. Just as informative as "Two Years Before the Mast".

KurzbeschreibungThe Los Angeles Rangers were no strangers to attempts upon their lives.Midnight raids plagued the cities where Major Horace Bell and the other rangers were trying to maintain peace between the Mexicans, allied Indians and American people.This personal and historical account, from Major Horace Bell, covers the years that Bell worked as a mounted ranger during the tumultuous handover period of a newly acquired Southern California territory from Mexico to the American government. In his retelling of the events that occurred whilst he was stationed in the Southern Californian territory you will read of the dangers that faced these brave mountain rangers every day. Under the command of Captain Alexander Hope, Bell and many other ranger volunteers, signed up in hope of calming the rising tensions of the Mexican people in 1853.Lawlessness, the cities of Tombstone and Dodge City, and gunfights go hand-in-hand when detailing the American West. However, it is the stories of the Los Angeles Rangers that remain absent from many historical biographies and accounts. Major Horace Bell, like many of the men working on the borders, hunted down murderous bandits and criminals, several of which had connections to the perilous syndicate of Joaquin Murrietas band. Bells memoir is a history of early Los Angeles, an essential and highly entertaining source for this period of the California Gold Rush. John BoesseneckerReminiscences of a Ranger recounts the rise of Southern California with the deeply descriptive and detailed penmanship of Bell. Horace Bell (1830 1918) was active in the American era of 19th century California, especially in the Los Angeles region. He was a Los Angeles Ranger, filibuster, soldier, lawyer, journalist and newspaper publisher, and author of two Southern California history books.
